The Emergency circle for Negro War
Relief has been organized in New York
City with headquarters at 12 West Twelfth Street for the purpose of carrying for the wives and children of negro soldiers.

An official bulletin from Washington says the United States will have 100,000 in France this fall and 1,000,000 to be in an offensive next spring. These will include the regular army and the national guards.

When a man doesn't speak out and declare that he wants the United States in this war against Germany
you can put him down as wanting Germany to win it and the only reason why he don't say so is because he is afraid.

Renewed instructions that drafted men who failed to report for service were to be clashed and punished as de-sisters were sent to United States District Attorneys and agents of the Department of Justice by Attorney General Gregory.

About the only accurate statement connected with the long story about the first 132 men summoned before the draft board in Larue county being accepted as soldiers was that Abraham Lincoln was born in that county, and that had previously been regarded as fairly well established.

To meet the threatening swarm of submarines Japan has reinforced the allied fleet with another squadron of battlecraft as an aid to Vice Admiral Sims around the British Isles, the fact having become known that every American vessel crossing the Atlantic is forced to fight its way through German submarines.

W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, has written for publication an article in explanation and advocacy of the bill pending in Congress to insure the men of the fighting forces of the United States. It is entitled "Family Allowance, Indemnity and Insurance for Our Soldiers and Sailors; the Duty of a Just Government."

Every American knows that it is not feasible to distribute cornbread from bakeries, and it is therefore necessary for us to furnish our allies with sufficient wheat to enable them to have a wheat basis for the loaf. Therefore economize in flour. A saving of one pound in flour each week by each person is the mark set by Hoover.

After approving contracts for more than 125 vessels, to cost upwards of $100,000,000, the government shipping board has decided to ask congress for an additional appropriation of nearly $1,000,000,000. The shipping program is to be more tremendous than was ever dreamed of and instead of 3,000,- 000 tonnage the first year, it is expected that this amount will be doubled.

PRESIDENT FIXES

COAL PRICES

From All Mines in The United States.

Bituminous coal prices were fixed by President Wilson Monday for every mine in the United States. The next step in coal control, White House announcement said, will be to fix the prices to be charged by middlemen and retailers.

Prices were set on cost of production from estimates furnished by the Federal Trade Commission after months of exhaustive investigation. The country is divided into twenty-nine districts and every producer in a district will market his output at the same price.

The prices named for coal in the large producing districts average slightly more than $2. In a few districts they are below that figure and in the Western territory they are higher. Washington State is highest with $2.25.

The Danville Military Band furnished the music.
The band was made to play. Hamilton then secured the services of Mr. Swinebroad to plot and sell the farm in lots and "baby farms". The sale was "pulled off" last Saturday and was a big day in Lancaster. A splendid crowd was in attendance and the bidding spirited. The Danville Military Band furnished the music.

"Monk" Gill made the Burgoo. Messrs.

Swinebroad and Hamilton worked with the bidders and Mr. Bolivar Bond, of Versailles, who is certainly an artist in his line, was the auctioneer.

The property brought good prices, which can be attributed to the energy and ability of Messrs. Swinebroad and Hamilton. Either one of these men are "wheel horses" alone but when you work them as a pair—something is sure to move.

The services of Mr. Swinebroad as a sales manager, are being much sought after, not only at home but in other counties. His next sale will be residence property in Lancaster for the McCormick heirs on Sept. 8, and on Sept. 15 two fine farms for J. W. and
R. K. Speaks in this county.

Her Dowry

By RUTH GRAHAM

In the Rocky mountains, not far west of Denver, there lived William Harrison, who had taken his wife and daughter into the gold region for the purpose of looking in the ground for a fortune. He settled himself and them in a log cabin on Clear creek. He would wash for gold until he found himself possessed of enough of the precious metal to keep his family for awhile, then he would start out on a prospecting tour to dig holes in the ground, hoping to find gold in paying quantities.

But Harrison's diggings resulted in nothing. Each day he became more disappointed and discouraged.

One day a stranger came to Harrison's cabin and asked for a night's lodging. Mrs. Harrison took him in and gave him what she had, which was little enough, for they were very poor. He was waited on by Isabel at supper and chatted with her while he ate. He drew from her the story of her father's efforts to win a fortune for her out of the ground, besides a secret that was unknown to her parents. She loved a young man who was hunting for gold and had achieved no more success than her father. He was able to obtain only a precarious living for himself, and it would be a sin for the couple to marry while doomed to such abject poverty.

The stranger seemed much interested in the girl's story and asked many questions concerning the young man. Isabel assured him that he was of good character and not likely to change or one following an ignis fatuus, since everybody in that region was a gold hunter. He was the son of a prospector. Therefore he might be said to have been born to the occupation.

The stranger seemed to be a peculiar man with strange ideas. Instead of berating Isabel's father or her lover for wasting time in a hunt that there was not one chance in a thousand of being successful, he said that life consisted of taking chances, for no one could tell what a day or an hour might bring forth. "Life," he said, "is not even a speculation. It is sure to end in the grave."

This was said with a melancholy spirit. The man was ill and possibly was influenced by his illness. He remained a month in Harrison's cabin, ministered to by Mrs. Harrison and Isabel. But he showed such interest in Isabel that he fell entirely under her care. He was delayed by a snowstorm that came early in the winter, and the snow was likely to remain on the ground for many months. Isabel told her friend that she regretted this because it covered a little grotto near the house where in fair weather she used to go and sow or read. He replied that life was only enjoyed by contrasts and the longer she was kept out of her grotto the happier she would be to get into it again.

When it ceased to snow the stranger took his departure. Before going he said to her:

"You will receive a dowry which will enable you to marry the man you love."

Isabel looked at him in astonishment and asked him when the dowry would come to her.

"When the sun is warm enough to melt the snow," was the reply.

The stranger was such an odd individual that Isabel thought little of this statement, thinking that he was not aware of what he said. She certainly did not place sufficient faith in it to tell it to her father and mother or to her lover.

That was a long winter, and her father found prospecting difficult on account of the deep snow. The family pined for the spring to come to release them from their cabin and enable them to enjoy the out-of-door life so inviting in the mountains.

At last there came a series of warm days, and the snow began to melt and run down the gulches in torrents. It was so thick that it required time to leave bare any of the soil or rocks. One remark of the stranger Isabel remembered. It was that the longer she was kept out of her grotto the more she would rejoice in re-entering it.

One morning after several warm days she was sitting by the window of her little room sewing. The sun was still melting the snow, shining brightly. Thinking of the stranger's remark about her grotto, she turned her head to look at it, for she could see it from her window. The snow had been melted so far as to leave several bare spots. On the edge of one of these spots she noticed a dazzling light made by the sun shining on some smooth substance. Isabel's curiosity was excited as to what this substance was, for she did not remember to have left any bit of metal or glass there in the autumn. She went out to the grotto, and there at her feet was a gold coin.

She picked it up wondering, then hunted in the snow for more. She found no more, but the next morning the snow had melted so far as to uncover a basket that had been missing, and it was full of gold coins.

The wonder stricken girl counted them and found what was an ample dowry.

She at once connected it with the stranger she had nursed and put it away for him, thinking he would return and claim it. But he never came. Isabel kept it untouched till the next autumn came on, and then, having heard nothing from him, she acted on what he had said about finding her dowry "when the snow melts" and appropriated it to herself.

A Grievous Error

A Labor Day Story

By EDWARD MACFARLAND

Little Maude Swift was taken sick in the night, and her father was called up to see to the doctor. She feared the child would die and begged to trust him that the increased fever to come.

He was perfectly unaware that he might be taken for a suspicious character, running along at night, cut his corner to make short cuts and his general appearance to say the least, disheveled.

He heard footsteps behind him, and they were guiding on him. But he thought nothing about it, for his mind was on his sick child. Suddenly the pursuer clapped a hand on his shoulder and hand cuffs on his wrists.

"What's this?" he asked, astonished. "You're wanted," replied a policeman. "Let me go. My child is sick, and I must get a doctor."

"Oh, the doctor racket has been worked too often! It's no good."

Swift was in agony, but could do nothing. He was taken to a police station, where a complaint of burglary was entered against him. A woman came to the station, looked at the prisoner and said, "That's the man," and went away.

Meanwhile the mother waited for the return of her husband with the doctor. Morning came, but neither Swift nor the doctor came. As the sun rose the child died. Then to complete the mother's agony word came from her husband that while running for the doctor he had been mistaken for a burglar and arrested.

During the day the tolls tightened around Swift. The rogues' gallery was ransacked for his picture and the photograph of a criminal named Jack Bowen, who was the image of Swift, was found. The woman who had identified the prisoner the night before looked at him again and was sure it was the man she had caught opening the bureau drawer, and, on being discovered, had run.

There was never a clearer case against a man. Had he been a gentle man he could have proved that his gravity was not in his line, but he was a plain workman and could only prove that his name was on the rolls of the Carpenters Union in good and regular standing. But this did not save him. He was convicted of burglary and sentenced to six years in state prison.

The day he was sent up his wife came to see him. She knew he was innocent and had sworn that he had been with her five minutes before the alleged burglary had been committed and that he had left her to go for a doctor to attend their sick child. The story would have elicited sympathy if it had been believed, but it was not. What was the testimony of a burglar's wife worth? Nothing.

"Well, Tom," she said to him, "this is hard, isn't it?"

"Yes, Ma'am, it is."

"Why don't they find a way to avoid such mistakes?"

"I don't know. I suppose they can't."

"Maybe some day the nation will have justice. About that time it will be better off, I suppose. So justice is a nice thing to believe in."

I hope so."

"Well, Tom, you can't help but feel bad over the whole thing."

The woman was the only one to comfort him. All the rest were there to give him the cold shoulder.

Swift had served a year in prison when one night he had been called to defend himself in court. He had failed to be taken to the police station. Swift had been taken to a station on his way for the court. The result of the trial was a hung jury in suspense.

"Great Scott!" Tom exclaimed. "I didn't hear of your breaking out."

"I haven't broken out," said the man suddenly.

"You were sent up yesterday. That'll swear to. What's your name?"

"Tom Patsy Wolf." Tom was well known. "I've been before the court many times. I couldn't tell anybody."

The sergeant looked puzzled.

"Take him in and lock him up," he said. "I'll find out about the matter in the morning."

The next day he learned that Tom Patsy Swift, the man he supposed Patsy Wolf to be, was in the penitentiary. The picture in the rogues' gallery was examined, and it was found that it might be the likeness of either one of the men. It began to dawn on the police that they had made a mistake.

A month later, after a great deal of red tape had been untied, on the morning of Labor day Tom Swift was discharged from prison, and, having reached the city where he had left his family, he saw his companion laborers marching. He stood for a moment watching them, muttering to himself. "You've got to do boys, besides getting better wages. You've got to see that when one of your number gets into trouble with the law and is innocent there'll be detectives to find out where the guilty lie."

When Tom reached home he found that his wife had about come to the "end of her rope" and could not have carried the burden any longer.

"How did they get you out, Tom?" she asked.

"The governor pardoned me."

"And will they punish those who put you there for not taking more care?"

"No. They'll be punished in another world, and maybe they're not to blame. I don't know."

POULTRY AND EGGS

HENS DURING MOLT.

Give Better Results on Full Feed Than When Rations Are Scanty.

As the molting period approaches some poultrymen continue giving the feed allowance, while others do not intend to have hens molt and to others the hens to lay earlier than most of the flocks, says the low. Hence feed them when molting to insure better egg production. This is a practice shortens the time when hens look suddenly and here may be determined by observation, but it has not been shown that egg production is thereby increased. To furnish reliable information on this point the Pennsylvania experiment station selected two pens of White Leghorns containing eighteen hens each and fed one pen liberally and the other scantily during the last half of August when molting was in progress. After that time both pens received full feed.

Records of egg production were accurately kept during September, October and November, and the figures show that the eighteen hens scantly fed during the last part of August produced 630 eggs in September, 126 in October and thirty-nine in November as compared with 185 eggs in September, nineteen in October and thirty-six in November produced by the eighteen hens liberally fed.

From these figures we find that feeding molting produced by limited feed apparently gave an increase in egg production during the last two months, but in the totals for the three months the pen that was scantly fed fell behind, producing only 296 eggs, while the liberally fed pen produced 316. Such evidence leads to the conclusion that forced molting has no economic advantage.

In further support of this conclusion it has been observed that careful, regular feeding in late summer and early fall encourages laying, because the hens are kept up to normal weight during the molting period and do not have to recover any lost flesh before commencing to lay again. Limited feeding shuts off the egg yield at this time of year as well as any other. The best practice consists in keeping the hens laying as late as they will in the summer. Late molting progresses rapidly when once it starts and laying follows without delay.

Leghorns produce eggs cheaper than hens of the general purpose breeds—Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and Orpingtons. This fact was one of the results obtained in a rather extensive feeding test recently reported by poultrymen of the United States department of agriculture. The birds shown are White Leghorns.

To those who want a well appearing flock, the suggestion may be given that feeds high in oil and protein, such, for instance, as sunflower seed. If furnished at molting time, give a glossy luster and attractiveness to the new feathers. Such feeds also keep the birds thrifty.

The exact time of molting varies considerably with different hens, but usually it is just before cold weather begins. Those that molt earlier, in July or early August, are not the best layers, as a rule. In fact, some poultrymen still think individuals from the flock late molting allows egg production until cold weather occurs more rapidly and leaves the hens in good condition for fall and early winter laying. It is most common in high producing strains and where careful summer feeding occurs.

Grow Pure Bred Poultry.

With the work and publicity that have been going on in favor of purebred poultry, we are sure to find a larger per cent of the annual poultry owners taking up a good quality of stock to start with than was the case ten or even five years ago. This means a new and greater demand upon the pure bred poultrymen for breeding and laying stock next fall.

First American Poultry Show.

The first poultry exhibition in America was held in 1848 at the Public Garden, in Boston. England had its first public exhibition of poultry in the Crystal Palace, at London, and the two exhibits did a great deal to give impetus to raising better poultry. Every poultry show, even the most local and smallest, has its great uses.

POULTRY PICKINGS.

- Keep the summer chicks growing. Provide shade. Give the youngsters all the range possible. Exercise is the best tonic growing stock can have.
- Bolled oats, after draining off the water, can be mixed with bran and cornmeal to make a valuable egg food.
- Cow pasture polished by poultry and should be added to the diet at least twice a week.
- Buttermilk and sour milk are not only polished, but are valuable additions to the poultry ration. Kalfir corn is a finely good substitute for wheat.
- The trouble with so-called cereals is that they do not get enough grain during the summer months to make them produce a profitable number of eggs to pay for their keep.

DUCK RAISING PAYS.

Birds Are Easily Handled, and With Care Return Good Profits.

Improved methods of artificial incubation and brooding combined with judicious feeding with the aid of machinery have enabled duck breeders to grow their stock early and thus obtain the best prices and to raise large numbers of birds economically.

Almost any location will do for duck raising: Cheap, warm or marshy.

The Indian Runner duck, which had its origin in India—hence the forepart of its name—has rapidly come into wide popularity by reason of its prolific egg yield and by reason of which it is aptly termed the Leekorn of the duck family. The name "Runner" is very appropriate, for they literally run, instead of waddling, as do other ducks, and sometimes present a very comical appearance. The bird pictured is an Indian Runner duck.

land will do nicely, though a sandy soil is to be preferred because of its better sanitary conditions and drainage. If a large plant is contemplated it should be located close to a railroad or other means of direct communication with the city markets and the buildings should be arranged as conveniently as possible so as to reduce labor to a minimum.

Houses for ducks are simple affairs. They are little more than shelters and require no furnishings, such as roosts and nest boxes. Make no mistake about building the house on well drained ground and keeping it dry. Ducks can withstand a great deal of cold, their feathers are almost impenetrable, but they must have their feet protected. Scarcity of bedding on the floor or a low, damp floor will soon put a whole flock of ducks out of business. They must have dry quarters, strange as this may sound in view of their being given to water.

If a stream or pond is available it is well to allow the breeders the freedom of it, as the eggs will prove more fertile. If an artificial pool is used be sure to clean it out frequently, for it is quickly fouled. Young ducks may be given the freedom of a stream until they are about eight weeks old, when they should be penned and fattened for market. Ducks are heavy drinkers. They must be provided with a liberal supply of drinking water at all times. It has been said that the only neglect that will kill young ducks is failure to furnish them with sufficient drinking water.

The food must be largely of a soft character. Too much hard food does not agree with ducks. Moistened mashed are best, and the simplest ingredients are to be preferred. Grub is even more essential to ducks than it is to chickens, and they should have oyster shells as well.

Don't Crowd Poultry.

Many fine chicks are materially injured by crowding. They are growing rapidly and are greedy, eating once to get all they can, regardless of the wants of the others. They crowd and tread on and pick each other until we find our once promising flock looking decidedly ragged. Separate them according to size and give the weaker ones a chance. We may find our best fowls among them. The coops should be enlarged as they grow older. The cockerels should be separated from the pullets when they are three months old. But if you don't wish to keep them for breeders it would be better to sell them.

Save Poultry Droppings.

Chicken manure is the richest of all farm manures in fertilizing elements and it should be so cared for that none of its excellent elements be wasted or leached away. It should be preserved under shelter and have mixed with it such material as kainit or dry earth or acid phosphate or lime plaster or manure. Do not turn it or mold it to it since it would drive off the nitrogen. It should not be mixed with sawdust or sand, as they are without calce. To connect with loam or leaf would be all right.

ALL AROUND THE FARM

STORING POTATO CROP.

Explanations of Above Ground Storage Used in Various Parts of the Country. Prepared by United States Department of Agriculture.

The insulated frame potato storage house is not used very extensively and as a rule is better adapted to southern than to northern climatic conditions. The construction feature of such a storage house is the thorough insulation of its walls, ceiling, doors and windows. The type of house described in farmers' bulletin 548 for the storage of sweet potatoes will serve equally well for the Irish potato, but in the case of the latter no artificial heat will be required. Utilities for heating storage houses of the type under discussion in the north at least must be provided for extremely cold weather. This is usually accomplished by means of an ordinary heating stove. This type of storage house is not to be recommended for northern locations, nor is it advocated for the south except where poor drainage conditions will not permit the use of the dugout or cellar style of house. It is not recommended because it cannot be so economically constructed, nor does it furnish as good a type of storage as the properly ventilated cellar storage house.

The Aroostook Type of Storage House.

The Aroostook type of storage house, with concrete or masonry basement walls and wooden superstructure, seems to be distinctively a product of Maine and so far as has been observed is not found to any extent outside of that state. It is an expensively constructed house and is almost always located on a sidehill or knoll in order that advantage may be taken of a ground level entrance. Few, if any, of these storage houses have both front and rear end driveway entrances on the same ground level, but practically all of them have a rear ground level basement driveway and a front ground level entrance to the wooden superstructure. When the rear entrance is located in the end the basement is usually divided into a number of bins on either side of the driveway. The floor may or may not be of cement. Usually those storage houses that have a cement floor as well as those which do not are provided with false wooden floors to permit ventilation under the piles of tubers.

Basement Storage.

The basements of the Maine type of storage houses are usually from eight to twelve feet in depth, and most of them have a capacity of several thousand bushels.

An insulated frame potato storage house used for storing second crop of potatoes at Morris, Tex.

sand barrels. As a rule, the only provision for the ventilation of the basement is by means of trapdoors in the floor above, through which the filling of the bins is completed. Occasionally a ventilator is found in the roof. In the potato crop in the bins the bins are filled from one end to the other full from the basement up. As already stated, the remainder of the bin is filled from the lower floor through a trapdoor over each bin. In addition to serving a useful purpose in filling the bins and protecting the potatoes from inclement weather, the wooden superstructure of these storage houses may be used for the housing of hay or grain or for barrels, sacks, farm implements and wagons. The house shown in Fig. 17 of the folder is representative and gives a fairly accurate conception of the style of construction of its exterior. That such houses have proved satisfactory to the potato grower in Maine is evident from the fact that practically no other style of potato storage house is in use in that state. It is not conceivable, however, that they will ever supersede the dugout pit or storage cellar now so extensively used in the middle and far western states, and it is not at all probable that the latter will ever supersede the Aroostook type in Maine. Both have distinctive features which peculiarly adapt them to their own environment, but do not necessarily preclude their use in other localities.

The Artificially Refrigerated Storage House.
The artificially refrigerated potato storage house is as yet hardly in existence. The present use of this type of storage house is confined practically to the holding of northern grown seed potatoes in cold storage for second crop planting in the south.

There is probably little demand for an artificially refrigerated potato storage house in the northern potato grow-

ONE "FIRST LADY"

Wife of M. Poincare, President of the French Republic.

SHE WAS BORN AN ITALIAN.

Her Position as the President's Wife Was Subject to Criticism at First Because of Her Foreign Birth and First Marriage, but Tact Has Allayed It.

Like the wives of many other statesmen of France, Mme. Poincare has not occupied a conspicuous place in the public eye. She is known to be a brilliant woman, who prefers the seclusion of her own home to the glare of publicity. Her brilliant husband has always found her a source of inspiration, for she is a deep student of public questions, takes a keen interest in his career and has often proved herself a wise counselor, in whom he places much reliance. He gives her due credit for the part she has played in the advancement of his ambitions.

Brilliant, luxury and elegance passed completely from the Elysées palace with Empress Eugenie. The wives of presidents have sought, for political purposes and largely also from personal preference, to give life at the Elysées a bourgeois character, have been snubbed by European royalty and have surrendered abjectly the social rank to the Bourbons and the families of the first empire.

The duchess is an inheritance from the Empress Eugenie. She mixed up in affairs of state with such disastrous results that when the republic was established, the government determined to make it impossible for the president's wife to have enough influence to become dangerous.

During M. Poincare's early political ambitions his wife's name was brought up by his enemies, injuriously. Not only was Mme. Poincare's birthplace held against her but also the fact that her first marriage was to another man, an attorney in the Vichy's employ. In 1895 she married M. Poincare after he had left his law office to become a member of the Chamber of Deputies. The couple had a son, Raymond, born in 1897. They were living in Paris at the time of the first trial for high treason against M. Poincare, then one of the leading lawyers in Paris, to represent him before the courts. Her excellent bearing and noble qualities of mind, as she fought during the conduct of the case, so appealed to the noted bachelor lawyer that he was later led to pay court to his former client and marry her.

For Linen Closets.
If bits of sandalwood are kept in the drawers and other places with the clothing its fragrance will penetrate and give everything a delightful odor.

For use with household linens this is recommended, and all the ingredients may be had of the druggist:

Dried lavender 12 ounces
Dried rose leaves 12 ounces
Ground rose root 6 ounces
Ground orange peel 12 ounces
Cinnamon 12 ounces
Cloves 12 ounces

The spices might be had of the grocer.

Mix with twelve ounces of fine table salt and put into a fruit jar. Leave them a month to blend odors perfectly, then let stand open an hour or two each day in a closet or bureau drawer.

The ingredients are ground, not pulped, and must be of the best. The merest suspicion of musk may be added to these preparations, but the slight tint too much will ruin the odor, as musk is very strong. Only the most delicate odor is admissible if one is required in taste.

Hygiene Tip.

Always hold milk bottles under the cold water tap until they are thoroughly washed as soon as they are received. It is impossible to tell what hand have touched them, and washing the bottles also prevents any dirt entering the milk compartment of the ice box.

Just as soon as you are aware that you have been exposed to poison ivy or begin to feel that itching and noticeable red spots rub the part with freshly gathered catnip leaves. Catnip is the enemy of poison ivy.

TO THE FARMERS

OF KENTUCKY

The Agricultural Department at Washington, D. C., is calling upon the Commissioners of Agriculture and other agricultural forces throughout the United States, earnestly pleading with them to use their influence toward increasing the acreage of wheat sown this Fall; and since it is most imperative that Kentucky should increase her 1917 acreage sown, I beg of each land owner in this Commonwealth to see that Fall sowing is increased fully 25 per cent in acreage. Not only is this appeal made to the farmer in the nature of a "war appeal" and a patriotic effort, but it is duty each farmer owes to his own household to produce an adequate supply of the necessity of life for the sustenance of that family, and under the existing war condition, his obligations toward helping feed our allies should be just as paramount and just as eagerly performed as is the debt and duty he owes to his own family. Kentucky for the past few years has been producing annually around eight million bushels of wheat, and it is estimated that eight million bushels of wheat, and it is estimated that ten million bushels of wheat, are consumed each year by the people of this Commonwealth. Therefore, in order to do our "mite" during this serious crisis, I beg of the Kentucky people to decrease the supply of wheat usually consumed at least two million bushels, and to the farmers of this State to do their utmost in producing twelve million bushels in 1918, which will give our Allies the magnificent amount of four million bushels, and which is nothing more than we should do for those brave warriors who are to-day fighting the battle for the world's freedom. Do not let the high price of seed wheat influence or prevent you from sowing an increased acreage, nor doubt not for a minute but that the growing of wheat will be a profitable as well as a patriotic effort, even if the war were to close tomorrow. I cannot believe that the farmers of this State fully realize the seriousness of the situation, and I therefore call upon them and assure them that every pulsation of the heart of every true American citizen is throbbing, and most crying aloud for a greater increased production of this staple product. Mr. Farmer, won't you please do your part?

MAT S. COHEN
Commissioner of Agriculture.

CREECH

Much grief was felt in the community last Thursday August 23, when it became known that the death angel had visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Creech, at Nina, taking the life of their only child and son, James. He was fifteen years of age, a favorite among all who knew him for his kind deeds and merry disposition. He had been sick for about five weeks with typhoid and pneumonia.

Everything within human power was done to keep the young life, that was so promising to develop into splendid young manhood.

The body was carried to Clay county to be buried at the place he had selected.

We shall meet, but we shall miss him. There will be one more vacant seat.

STANFORD FAIR

Big Success And Will Not Lose Money.

The Stanford Fair was a howling success, notwithstanding the fact that the first day was marred by a heavy down pour of rain which cut the first days attendance down to a minimum. The genial secretary, Mr. E. C. Walton, informs us however that the association will not lose any money and may come out with a few dollars to the good.

Garrard county entries came out on top as usual, more especially with the Ky. Red Berkshire hogs and the Jersey cattle.

The following we clip from last Friday's Interior Journal, which gave the awards:

TO-NIGHT
At School Auditorium.

A splendid program has been arranged to take place at the School Auditorium to-night, which will fill the building, for beside being both educational and patriotic, a delightful musical program has been arranged. Prof. G. W. Colvin of Springfield, will deliver his famous address, "The School and the War." Other speakers of ability will make short talks, all of which is given under the auspices of the Garrard County Teachers Institute.

The admission is free. Tonight at 7:30.

ASSESSOR TO BEGIN
TAKING LISTS SEPTEMBER 1st.

County Assessor, Dave C. Sanders is making preparations to begin his work of taking the assessment of Garrard county September 1st.

The work of making the assessment according to Mr. Sanders will be greatly increased this year, owing to the new tax law which is now in effect and entirely different assessment forms will take the place of those used heretofore. Mr. Sanders wants the cooperation of the tax payers of the county in the effort to secure the correct assessment and render whatever assistance possible in completing the work, which will take twice as much time as in previous years.

WILSON REJECTS
POPE'S PEACE PROPOSAL

President Wilson has rejected the peace proposals of Pope Benedict. The President declares that it would be folly to take the path outlined by the Catholic prelate, as it would not result in permanent peace. Although the American Chief Executive does not enter into extended discussion of the question of peace, he, in the firmest language, denounces the course of the German Imperial Government and goes straight over the heads of the militaristic leaders with an appeal to the tiered people.

In Washington the President's reply is regarded as the high water mark of the war, and the fact that the United States was the first to answer the Pope is taken to indicate that the Allies have selected President Wilson as their spokesman. The position of the Entente nations is not known, but it is believed that they will endorse the position taken by President Wilson.

MOONLIGHT SCHOOL SESSION

The second session of moonlight schools opens September 3rd. This is for men of draft age—21 to 30—that were not called in the first draft and, also, for others who cannot read or write and for any who can read and write but would like to improve their education. A splendid course in agriculture, domestic science and history will also be given.

Every district should have a moonlight school and every man and woman in the district should attend. A large class will be more interesting and will encourage the men of draft age who are expected to attend. The next draft may include these men, so now is the time to teach them. Books furnished free for all beginners. All teachers are urged to teach all citizens to help locate and get the registered men to school.

ESTHETIC INSTINCT DATES FAR BACK. It would be interesting to know, if we could, when the first primitive manifestation of the esthetic instinct came to man. Certainly farther back than the written narrative of history or those anterior traditions that form the earliest myth and fable and religion; for, even, then, are their monuments of stone and prehistoric burial mounds, and almost farther than the geologic records of his presence tell.—Exchange.

Visit of Gen. Scott to Trenches in Galicia an Inspiration to Russians

Before the return of the American Mission to Russia, General Scott, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, paid a visit to the troops on the Galician front with Col. Kutchilloff, where he so inspired the soldiers that they fought with renewed vigor. The picture shows General Scott in one of the trenches with his guide, wearing the regulation uniform of the American army. He appears as other Generals from the United States will when our troops enter the trenches in France.

A FAMILY MEDICINE

In Her Mother's Home, Says This Georgia Lady, Regarding Black-Draught, Relief From Headache, Malaria, Chills, Etc.

Ringgold, Ga.—Mrs. Chas. Gaston, of this place, writes: "I am a user of Thedford's Black-Draught. In fact, it was one of our family medicines. Also in my mother's home, when I was a child. When any of us children complained of headache, usually caused by constipation, also a very bad case of Black-Draught, which would rectify the trouble. Often in the spring, we would have malaria and chills, or troubles of this kind, we would take Black-Draught pretty regular until the liver acted well, and we would soon be up and around again. We would not be without it, for it certainly has saved us lots of doctor bills. Just a dose of Black-Draught when not so well saves a lot of days in bed."

The Herbs Black-Draught has been in use for many years in the treatment of stomach, liver and bowel troubles, and the popularity which it now enjoys is proof of its merit. If your liver is not doing its duty, you will suffer from constipation, flatulence, etc., as well as headache, blisters, inflammation, indigestion, etc., resulting from the above, serious trouble may result.

The Herbs Black-Draught has been found a valuable remedy for the以上。 It is surely a valuable, and in a price and way, I say, this is the best to the power of any article we have the low price of qualified. Price, in it on Thedford's original and genuine. E. 79

FALL FROCKS.

Points About the New Lines of One Gown.

The new frocks are delightful. They are more plushing—just because they are new than last season's frocks and they are attractive enough in themselves to merit the favor of women who are massed in about the school class, those two reasons to quantity that are so much more large than mere material or color interest.

The tail of the approach to the circular process there very little to find, they are plushing to make the sleek effect always associated with plusses ideals. All the widths are straight, and the different most desirable now suggest slenderness and slenderness the boyish, undeviated figure rather than the much curved feminine figure which was supposed to "set off" a prima donna model to advantage. The modern frock eliminates curves at bust and hip, and its straight lines are intersected with very little by the inevitable sash or girdle which draws in the soft material above or below the natural waist line just enough to relieve the silhouette of any suggestion of clumsiness or angularity.

Sometimes the skirt is held to the bodice two inches or so below the waist line, and a narrow sash is drawn around the girdled belt at the waist, never singly, but just enough to show that the figure is really trim and slender and not "straight up and down." A frock of this type is of black satin with a panel running from the neck opening to the edge of the skirt. The bodice, fastened at either side over the panel with covered buttons, is attached with gathering to a rather deep yoke and falls in undulating lines to the hip. Here the rump is skinned in, and the rump is also buttoned to the front panel, giving a long line from neck to ankle. A narrow sash of the material passes around the waist, crosses at the bust and comes around to lie loosely at the front over the panel. This five-knot coat sleeve with turned back cuffs of white wavy satin and a turned-over collar of the same, or a short 2 in V-neck opening. At the edge of the neckline one of the new, very deep bows, turned up to lie flat on the outer side and the skirt is in rows and rows with broad silk.

A Word to the Wise.

There is no more unwise procedure if you have not a perfectly proportioned figure to average height than to wear a new hat with a scalloped brim or a wide sailor cap placed about the head. The sitter, unfortunately, while the young sunbathing girl in the picture, is a good example of this upon a scale of 10. Nothing can more harm to a well-made piece of wrong sort of hat, and it is a very mean idea to bathe in a sunbath under such a hat. See how the woman who walks about in too wide, pointed hats can make her face look fat or full crowded little further outwards her head nobly out of proportion with the rest of her figure.

To Freshen Gloves.

Very few women seem to know that the rain spots so common to white kid gloves can readily be removed at home. Even some professional cleaners do not remove them. Take off the glove, hold the palm of tightly over the tip of the finger nail and then move your finger nail carefully up and down beneath the nail. You will see each rain-blemish thus treated disappear as if by magic.

Cucumber Sauce.

Peel and grate one nice tender cucumber and add two tablespoons of prepared mustard, mixing thoroughly. Add the juice of one lemon and the yolk of one egg beaten thoroughly, and serve with lettuce or other salad.

A GOOD FRIEND.

A good friend stands by you when in need. Lancaster people tell how Donn's Kidney Pills have stood the test. Mr. Zanone endorsed Donn's nearly five years ago and again confirms the story. Could you ask for more convincing testimony?

W. M. Zanone, Crib Orchard St., Lancaster, says: "My kidneys were irregular in action and the kidney secretions contained sediment. I had pain through my back and sides and when I stooped, I could hardly straighten. I used Donn's Kidney Pills and they completely relieved me of all the trouble." (Statement given February 6, 1912.)

On November 17, 1916, Mr. Zanone said: "I gladly confirm all I said in my former endorsement of Donn's Kidney Pills. I have very little trouble with my kidneys now, but when I do, I can depend on Donn's Kidney Pills, they always relieve me."

Popular Government.

No monarchial throne presses these states together, no iron chain of military power enchains them; they live and stand under a government popular in its form, representative in its character, founded upon principles of equality, and so constructed, we hope, as to last forever.—Daniel Webster.

Major Gen. Pershing, the American commander, told The Associated Press recently, that the war can be won only by hard and forceful blows delivered by a well-trained American army working in conjunction with the allied armies. Deplored the lukewarmness of the American people in regard to the war, General Pershing added:

"Every man, woman and child should support the Administration in its determination to arm and equip the American Army and to keep up its morale and that of the allied armies. This war will not be won by talk or by subscribing to the Red Cross. The American people must come to a full realization of what the war means. It can be won only by striking hard and forceful blows, not otherwise". The General was very emphatic in the interview, which lasted but a few minutes.

Might Be Worse.

Maude—"Merle says that she has an awful lot of friends," Miriam—"Yes; but some of them are not so bad."—Judge.

Color of Egg Yolk.

German chemists have found that yolks of eggs are colored by a pigment similar to that which gives autumn leaves their golden hue.

Nobody Knows.

Nobody can advise you how to rear your children, because the fact of the matter is that nobody really knows how it ought to be done. Bringing up your child the way it should go is a pretty big job.

For Mending.

Put a roll of gummed paper tape on the emergency shelf. It will make itself useful in dozens of ways, for mending torn box corners, paper dolls, book backs and leaves, sealing packages, holding the lids on tin boxes, etc.

Themselves.

Women wish to be loved without why or a wherefore—not because they are pretty or good, or wellbred, or graceful, or intelligent, but because they are themselves.—Amiel.

Chinese Pen Is Brush.

The Chinese pen is a brush made of soft hair, which is best adapted for painting the curiously formed letters of the Chinese alphabet.

No Filthy Lucre.

Country folk know nothing of what the world calls filthy lucre. They work with clean hands and all the lucre that comes into their hands is clean and leaves clean.—Exchange.

Cumbersome Form of Money.

One of the largest and most cumbersome forms of money is found in Central Africa, where the natives make use of a cruciform of copper which is large and weighty.

Always With Us.

Until we reach the millennium we shall have drones and idlers, but humanity must always stand ready to cast the life-line whenever and wherever a fellow creature is battling against the undertow.

Conservation of Room.

A motorboat that has been invented, that steers with exceptional speed and accuracy under all conditions, carries its motor and propelling mechanism in a hollow fin that also serves as a keel.

Daily Thought.

Education is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army.—Edward Everett.

Her Happiness Complete.

"Is your wife perfectly happy now?" "Oh, yes. She has sumptuous the best of old friends that we knew before I made my pile in Wall street."—Judge.

And How About the Lady?

When they perfect that invention for seeing the man you are talking to over the telephone, the little man with the gruff voice will lose a tremendous advantage.—Milwaukee Journal.

Pillows.

Pillows for use on shipboard, made of light and waterproof material by Maryland inventor, can be attached to a person to act as life preservers more quickly than the usual devices.

An Irish Superstition.

Peasants in the west of Ireland, it is said, will never leave an egg shell open at one end only. The spoon is always thrust through the lower end. Otherwise some wicked goblin will seize upon the shell and make a boat of it in which to sail the soul of the careless person to destruction.

We have learned since that a minister from Richmond, officiated at this wedding and we are glad to make the correction.

Don't Buy a Wagon Until You Have Seen the Columbus

Before you decide on any wagon, examine the Columbus. Strongly built of the best possible material the Columbus wagon gives the most satisfactory service for the longest period of years. There is no secret in the notedly long life of the Columbus wagon. It is the result of the methods employed in construction. There is no wood in this wagon which has not been air-dried under shelter from one to two years.

The axles and the spokes of the wheels are hickory; the hounds, bolsters and sandboards are oak, and the bottom of the box is straight grained flawless pine. These are just a few examples of the care which is taken to make this wagon as reliable as possible. The result is that the Columbus wagon is unbeatable in reliability and endurance. Come in and examine it for yourself. We know you will be pleased.
